

Summer creations so good you'll beg for s'more!

Chocolate. Marshmallows. Graham crackers.

Yes, my friends, that is the sweet taste of summer. Summer wouldn't be summer without the smell of a campfire and the ooey gooey stickiness of a s'more in between my fingers.

Aug. 10 is National S'mores Day, and what better way to celebrate than with this iconic American summer treat?

Apparently, the history of s'mores is quite a mystery. Mallowmars and Moon Pies—both with chocolate/marshmallow/graham cracker combinations—were first sold in 1913 and 1917 respectively.

Nobody knows who invented the actual s'more, but the first documented recipe was in the 1927 handbook called "Tramping and Trailing with the Girl Scouts." I imagine the tasty concoction spread quickly from campfire to campfire across the United States.

"Hey! Do you want a s'more?"

"Do I want some more what?"

I'm Just Cookin'

Written by Darci Tomky

“Some more s’mores, of course!!”

My college friends always have a rule around their campfires. “You must always eat s’mores until the point where you feel like you’re going to be sick ... then eat one more s’more!”

I love how s’mores are something you have to make on the spot. Despite how good S’more Pop Tarts or S’more Bars might be, there’s nothing like a fresh s’more hot off the fire.

And I know you can’t beat the original s’more, but here are some interesting combination creations for you to try for National S’mores Day.

I'm Just Cookin'

Written by Darci Tomky

~~This is a placeholder for a recipe or description of the s'mores, which has been obscured by a black box.~~