

Sprague faces new challenges with optimism

Written by Kyle Arnoldy

Two months removed from the farm accident that claimed the lower portion of his leg, Luke Sprague is ahead of schedule with his rehab and just days away from walking on his new prosthetic leg without the aid of crutches.

Doctors initially expected Luke to be bed-ridden with his leg in the air for six weeks following the injury. Less than four weeks later he attended a wrestling camp. While he obviously could not do all of the things he would have liked at the camp, being able to warm up and work out was a sign of progress for the young Sprague.

With less than two weeks of practice on his new prosthetic leg, Luke is quickly adapting to his new lower extremity, accompanied by his signature smile and positive attitude he has maintained throughout the ordeal.

Sprague faces new challenges with optimism

Written by Kyle Arnoldy

~~Copyright 2015 by Kyle Arnoldy. All rights reserved. This article is for personal use only. No part of this article may be reproduced, stored in a retrieval system, or transmitted in any form or by any means, electronic, mechanical, photocopying, recording, or by any information storage and retrieval system, without the prior written permission of the author.~~

