

Pesticide recertification coming up in NE Colo.

Written by Holyoke Enterprise

Colorado State University Extension is hosting private pesticide recertification sessions at various locations in northeast Colorado in February. Anyone who purchases restricted-use pesticides must have a private pesticide applicator license, which is issued by the Colorado Department of Agriculture.

Private applicator license study guides and exams can be obtained either from the Colorado Department of Agriculture or some Extension offices.

Once a license is received, it is active for three years before renewal is needed. Renewal can be achieved by either retaking the exam or attending a recertification meeting. These recertification meetings offer credits that can be substituted for retaking the exam.
